

EXHIBIT B

Prior Art: Any source program is converted by the compiler into a predetermined, fixed machine language output (i.e. 24-bit, etc.).

Invention: Any source program is converted by the compiler into a machine language program of address length N, where N is input by the user based on the size of the source program. If the user changes N, the output changes.